Sunil: Lisa started her first Antarctica trip in 2017. But she wasn't able to finish it.

Ana: Why not?

Sunil: There was a big storm. Parts of her boat broke. She had to change her plans.

Ana: What did she do next?

Sunil: She sailed around Australia, in 2018. For Lisa, that was more difficult than sailing around Antarctica. Near Antarctica, there are few boats. But near Australia, there are lots of boats. Lisa didn't want to hit them, so she stayed awake most of the time.

Ana: What?! Your body needs sleep!

Sunil: I know, but Lisa is very strong! She was tired, but she finished the trip in 58 days. Then, in 2022, she tried to sail around Antarctica again . . .

Ana: And she did it this time! Amazing!

15. In _____, he won the Stockholm Water Prize.

ANSWERS: 14. 1984, 15. 2015

POINTS: 2

Audio 9

Let's start with Rajendra Singh. In 1984, he went to a village in Rajasthan, India to build a medical clinic. But an old man told Singh that the villagers didn't need medicine. They needed water. In the past, people in Rajasthan had used johads. Johads are holes in the ground that collect rainwater. But then people stopped using johads. Instead, they dug deep wells to get water. This was a mistake. The wells took too much underground water. They made the area even more dry. So, Singh helped the villagers build the johads again. Now, when it rains, johads save the water. People can use it all year, and there are more plants and animals. Singh is called "The Waterman of India." In 2015, he won the Stockholm Water Prize.
