Professor: Good afternoon, everyone. In our last class, we talked about the bad effects of cell phones. Do you remember what those are? Yes, Paul.

Paul: When people use cell phones a lot, they often have attention problems and memory problems.

Professor: That's right. Cell phones can also create stress. They can be bad for your health. But cell phones have many benefits, too. What are some of those benefits?

Carla: Well, they help us communicate.

Professor: Yes. In the past, it was hard to contact people in other places, but now it's really easy. Cell phones are small, and you can take them with you everywhere. You can use them to send and receive text messages. What's another benefit of cell phones?

Paul: You can take pictures with them.

Professor: That's right. You don't always need a camera to take pictures anymore. Cell phones can take very good photographs and videos. What else can cell phones help you do?

Carla: Find places.

Professor: Yes! Your cell phone can help you find new places. It can tell you the best way to get to the place, so you get there faster. Anything else? Yes, Paul?

Paul: Well, I watch shows and movies on my phone.

Professor: Yes. A lot of people use their cell phones to watch TV or read the news. You can watch or learn about pretty much anything on your cell phone. Just be careful. The information you can read on your phone isn't always true!
